U.S. Secretary LaHood wraps up safety blogs

Twenty days of Put the Brakes on Fatalities Day safety blogs will wrap up tomorrow, Oct. 10, with United States Secretary of Transportation Ray LaHood urging motorists to take safety seriously. This national safety campaign focuses on reducing traffic fatalities.

The blogs feature stories from people who have lost loved ones or friends in traffic crashes as well as others who share stories on the need to improve safety on roadways.

“All of our technological advances alone are not enough to move us toward zero highway fatalities. We need America's motorists to help. We need them to hear safety messages like the entries on this Kansas DOT blog page, and we need them to follow up by driving safely,” said Secretary LaHood.
